CARE AND WORLD VISION PARTNER TO END HUMAN TRAFFICKING; ANNOUNCE AWARENESS CONVENTION, 'SAVE OUR SISTERS' (SOS)
Major Humanitarian Organizations Unite to End Human Trafficking

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11, 2015 – Today, CARE International and World Vision announced their new partnership to address issues related to human trafficking. They will hold an awareness convention, 'Save Our Sisters' (SOS) to signify the launch of this new partnership.

“Through this partnership, CARE and World Vision are excited to take part in making a better tomorrow possible for women everywhere,” said Helene Gayle, chief executive officer of CARE USA. “Because when empowered, women are capable of leading their families, their communities and the world into a better tomorrow.”

“Slavery is not a problem of the past. It still persists today,” said Kevin Jenkins, chief executive officer of World Vision. “With our combined efforts, we hope more people can become aware of this issue and join us in this war against human trafficking.”

The convention will be held in D.C. on Wednesday, March 25, in correlation to the International Day of Remembrance for the Victims of Slavery and the Transatlantic Slave Trade to stress that slavery still persists today.

The convention ties in well with the International Day of Remembrance for the Victims of Slavery and the Transatlantic Slave Trade’s 2015 theme on women and slavery, which will pay tribute to women who endured unbearable hardships, such as sexual exploitation. More details of this convention will be released leading up to the date of the event.
